

Cassie Schroer
EDUC 320
Dr. Browne
8 December 2015
Portfolio 12.3

Language Arts Philosophy

The Language Arts is one of the most important subjects for children at a young age because reading and writing are one of the key areas to learning. In Language Arts students start to learn how to read and write at a young age this is a skill that they will use the rest of their life so it is something that should be taught to the best of the teacher's ability. At a younger age they are taught the more basic concepts because they are just beginning to learn and need to develop over time. For older students they are still learning just at a more in depth level. They could be analyzing a book rather than just learning how to read the pages. Whether you are teaching younger students or older Language Arts is important because it is something that everyone uses in their daily lives and we encourage everyone to learn the most when it comes to any topic in school.

As a teacher it is important to address all areas of learning because not all students will learn in the same way. This is called the eight multiple intelligences. This could be hard when it comes to certain areas such as handwriting but as a teacher you need to engage with the students and understand where they are at and where they can benefit the most during learning. This is a reason I think it is important for the teacher to get to know the students personally and understand where they are at. This could be by just talking to the student or even taking a short pretest as the beginning of a unit to fully understand where each student is at academically.