

Cassie Schroer

EDUC 200

Journal 12

8 April 2015

Philosophy of Ethics

The philosophy that best describes the code of ethics for Minnesota teachers would be Essentialism, which is based on the views that the mind is the central element of reality. It is also known that essentialism is learning that happens through contact with the physical world and reasoning from observations. The teacher needs to know what is best for the students and use the knowledge they have to teach the students.

I feel Essentialism is the closest one because it is the common core. Ethics are also the common core to how the teacher runs the classroom every day. The teachers need to be well trained according to the MN Code of Ethics. Teachers need to know what they are doing to be able to teach students in the classroom in an efficient way that way the students are able to gain the knowledge that they need. Some teachers may need to focus on certain areas more because some students need more help in that area. The students also need to work hard on learning and achieving what they can with the teachers help in the classroom.

Overall I believe that Essentialism is the closest to the code of Ethics for Minnesota because a lot of teachers in Minnesota focus on the basics of teaching due to the state standards and the tests that the students have to take. Others could agree in a different way but there are more than one right choice that one could come upon.